In this example, the cybercriminal has newly purchased a domain with one letter different - missing the "r" - to effectively hijack the reply and continue corresponding, posing as a long-time contact.

After an email is deemed important enough to send via Frama RMail, the solution presents the full email address of each recipient to make it easy for senders to re-verify that they are about to send the right message to the right recipient. And, if Frama RMail identifies any cybercriminal trickery in the email addresses, such as clever domain misspells or tricky message header reply-to pivots, it instantly alerts the sender.
